Three-fourths of the Wrecked Homes Could Be Saved if Couples Had to Wait Two Years Before Getting Their Decree Absolute, Says Dorothy Dix, Offering Idea of Trial Divorce as Remedy

The newspapers have recently told the story of a husband and wife who were granted a divorce from each other but who were given permission to remain in the same home. Dorothy Dix, who has written many books on the subject of divorce, says that if couples had to wait two years before getting their decree absolute, three-fourths of the wrecked homes could be saved.

For an answer were the man and woman relieved of the expense and anxiety that so many lawsuits and divorces cost? It is a question to which each couple who is considering divorce should give thought. It is a question to which each couple who is considering divorce should give thought.
